

Dr. Binayak Sen's Unjust Imprisonment

Aseem Shrivastava

27 April, 2009

Countercurrents.org

“How many does it take to metamorphose wickedness into righteousness?”

“One man must not kill. If he does it is murder. Two, ten, one hundred men, acting on their own responsibility, must not kill. If they do, it is still murder. But a state or nation may kill as many as they please, and it is no murder. It is just, necessary, commendable and right. Only get people enough to agree to it, and the butchery of myriads of human beings is perfectly innocent.

“But how many does it take? This is the question. Just so with theft, robbery, burglary, and all other crimes. Man-stealing is a great crime in one man, or a very few men only. But a whole nation can commit it, and the act becomes not only innocent, but highly honorable...

“Verily there is magic in numbers! The sovereign multitude can out-legislate the Almighty, at least in their own conceit. But how many does it take? Just enough to make a nation....Alexander the Great demanded of a pirate, by what right he infested the seas. By the same right, retorted the pirate, that Alexander ravages the world. How far was he from the truth?”

- Adin Ballou, American social reformer and abolitionist (1803-90)

A famous story links two great Americans. When the United States invaded Mexico in 1846, the great naturalist Henry Thoreau, in an act of civil disobedience, refused to pay his taxes as a mark of protest against US actions and was sent to prison for his sin against the state. His close friend and mentor from Harvard, Ralph Waldo Emerson came to see him in jail. Emerson quipped “what are you doing inside?” Thoreau's reply made Emerson blush. “What are you doing outside?”, he replied.

There are times when jails become one of the few places of honour left in the world. Where, after all, would you like to find yourself if robbers and murderers were masquerading before the public as magistrates, judges and hangmen?

India today finds itself crouched in one such corner of shame, wherein those with permeable skin feel out of place before the television sets in their own living rooms. The air is thick with suspicion and accusation as the odour of staggering injustices hangs about us everywhere one goes.

While well-known serial killers gamely garner tickets from national parties for the parliamentary elections and mass-murderers sagely deliver their homilies from our television screens, women and men of integrity and courage must lurk and slide in the dark alleys of our cities or in the forlorn jungles of the land. It is a state of affairs which would have appalled and nauseated decent citizens a generation ago, let alone the heroes and heroines of our freedom movement. The sad truth is that as a civilisation India 's standing in the world has suffered a precipitous fall during the last several years, even as our elated elite's vainglorious aspirations to super-power-hood never miss a morning to announce themselves. Are they out of step, or the rest of us? Time will tell, though it is as much up to us to determine which way the die of destiny will roll.

If Adin Ballou is right, and the multitude is indeed sovereign (“unpunishable”, in the words of Edmund Burke), the question for us in India today becomes as to which multitude is the more important one, the one which is suffering the lies and crimes of our leaders, or the numerically far lesser one which prospers on their patronage. It is for us, the citizenry of this beleaguered country, to ensure that we find the courage to determine the morally correct order of importance. Or else, posterity will curse us.

The case of Dr. Binayak Sen

After six decades of freedom from colonial rule, India is still a largely poor country. One of the most severe forms of deprivation suffered by the poor is with respect to health, particularly so in a time when the cost of drugs, tests and healthcare has shot up so dramatically, thanks to the “liberalization” and privatization of the health sector. In such a context, it is worth asking how many Indian paediatricians one can name who have given 30 years of their lives – as a volunteer – in unstinting service to the needy poor in the countryside. At a guess, the actual number is in three figures, or perhaps even in two digits. But the name of Dr. Binayak Sen surely figures prominently among them.

On May 14 it will be two years since Dr. Binayak Sen's arrest by the Chhatisgarh government in Raipur . He was detained for allegedly being in violation of the provisions of the Chhatisgarh Special Public Security Act (2005) and the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act (1967).

The chargesheet against Dr.Sen bears resemblance to a page torn from Kafka. It accuses him, among other things, of “sedition”, of “waging war against the state”, and of “abetting unlawful activities”. It claims that Dr.Sen “is certainly a doctor: but is a big zero in terms of actual practice of medicine.” Obviously, a gold medal from one of the nation's premier institutions (CMC, Vellore, where many of the leaders who pass draconian laws are treated), and international awards like the 2004 Paul Harrison Award and the 2008 Jonathan Mann Award given by the Global Health Council are not adequate testimony to the exceptional achievements of the accused. The state government of course does not have eyes to see the Shaheed Hospital that Dr.Sen has helped to found in Chhatisgarh. And it seems to have forgotten that the “Mitandin” in the Indira Mitandin Swastha Yojana (Indira Volunteer Health Program) of the Chhatisgarh government is Dr.Sen's contribution, involving the training of an elected woman from each village to serve as a primary healthcare provider.

Dr. Sen's bail application has been summarily dismissed both by the High Court and by the Supreme Court. This despite the fact that not one of the more than 83 witnesses listed for deposition by the prosecution could furnish legally admissible evidence to establish the charges against Dr. Sen in the few hearings that have been held. 16 were dropped by the prosecutors themselves and six were declared 'hostile'. Jail officials themselves have denied the possibility that Dr. Sen could have been an inadvertent mailman for Narayan Sanyal, said to be a senior (imprisoned) Maoist leader with a heart condition, who Dr. Sen had been treating.

It is clear that Dr. Sen was arrested to check his activities as a crusader for civil liberties in Chhatisgarh. He is the national Vice President of the People's Union for Civil Liberties (PUCL) and had been exposing false encounter killings of innocents by the state police over the years. He had also exposed and publicly opposed the formation of Salwa Judum, the vigilante force that the state government has formed over the past several years by dividing the tribal population of the state against itself. With the help of the police, the security forces and Salwa Judum, the government has managed to get hundreds of villages forcibly vacated in order to clear the decks for powerful corporations to do their mining for coal, iron ore and bauxite. The evicted population – numbering in the hundreds of thousands – has been forced to hide in the jungles or get recruited by Maoist rebels and Naxalites. Hundreds, possibly thousands of people have been killed or imprisoned and tortured over the last few years. The remainder lives in conditions of utter squalor by the highways, without access to drinking water, sanitation, food or medicines. These are the people being 'asked' to pay the price for India's rapid march to the big league nations of a globalized world. Human cruelty is driven by a heartless, avaricious cowardice.

Apart from treating thousands of people for malaria, diarrhoea, and other diseases Dr. Sen had exposed these crimes of the state government repeatedly over the years. That is the main reason for his unlawful detention. His incarceration is meant to serve as an object lesson to all those who are keen to do their duty as citizens, expose state crimes, and fight for a decent society.

Even the Supreme Court is slowly waking up to the fact that Dr. Sen and others who have exposed the state crime involved in the formation of Salwa Judum are right. In September 2008, a Supreme Court Bench headed by Chief Justice K G Balakrishnan, after going through the National Human Rights Commission report on violence in Chhatisgarh said, "The allegation is that the state is arming private persons. You can deploy as many police personnel or armed forces to tackle the menace. But, if private persons, so armed by the state government, kill other persons, then the state is also liable to be prosecuted as abettor of the murder." Chief Justice Balakrishnan added "It is very painful to read the report. It says there is arson and looting, people are armed and they [Salwa Judum] are committing serious offences. It says people who are subjected to serious problems are still afraid of coming out."

The other day Ex-Chief Justice of India, Justice V.R. Krishna Iyer wrote an open letter to the Prime Minister drawing his attention to Dr. Sen's case. He pointed out that "instead of recognising their social contributions, the Indian state, by wrongly branding Dr. Sen and many other human rights defenders like him as 'terrorists', is making a complete mockery of not just democratic norms and fair governance but its entire anti-terrorist strategy and operations...the sheer injustice involved will only breed cynicism among ordinary citizens about the credibility and efficacy of Indian democracy itself."

Recently, a letter issued by more than 50 Indian doctors in America, and endorsed by a leading US linguist and dissident Noam Chomsky, wrote to the Chief Justice of India urging him to grant bail to Dr. Sen since he had been ailing with a heart condition for a while. He is on Amnesty International's "Prisoners at Risk". So far, there has been no response from the Indian justice system.

In an open letter to the authorities, Binayak Sen's mother Anusuya Sen wrote last year:

“Should I regard as justice the refusal of bail to one who even as a child was moved by injustice, who having devoted his entire working life selflessly to providing food and health to the poor, who without coveting wealth survived for days on dal, rice and green chillies, who is accustomed to living like the poor, who dedicated his life to serving the people of his country, and who is now arraigned for breach of public security and waging war against the state?”

“Doctorsaab cared about us,” Pilko Ram, a Chhatisgarh villager told The Hindustan Times. “And he did not charge any fee. Once, during a food crisis, he distributed grain in the village for two weeks.”

The comic farce of justice in India today

Except for the rank of crorepatris, perhaps a crore in number, the legal system in present-day India, intoxicated with wealth and corruption, deploys in practice the following dictum: “you are guilty until proved innocent”. You can be picked up for mere whispers if they are seen to expose state crimes.

One Rowlatt Act was enough to precipitate Jallianwala Bagh nine decades ago, causing an intensification and acceleration of the Indian freedom struggle. A slew of far more invasive legislation in “independent” India – the Chhatisgarh Special Public Security Act (CSPSA), the Armed Forces Special Powers Act (AFSPA) and the Unlawful Activities Prevention Act (UAPA), to name just a few of the many that have been passed in recent years – draws from us but a cowardly, paralysed silence.

As we learn from Binayak Sen's case, under the CSPSA even if someone is judged by a state functionary to have a “tendency to pose an obstacle to the administration of law” s/he can be detained.

In keeping with its campaign promises (and pressure brought to bear on it by over a hundred parliamentarians and the National Human Rights Commission) the UPA government had the widely-abused POTA (Prevention of Terrorism Act) and TADA (Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act) legislations removed from the statute book when it came to power in 2004. But most of the provisions under these laws were replicated in the legislation that it got introduced and passed after coming to power. Arrests without warrant and home searches without court orders are among them, as also pre-trial detention for up to six months.

According to legal experts the Criminal Procedure Code in India has tougher provisions than many of the anti-terror laws enacted in the US and the UK in recent times.

Binayak Sen is not the only human rights campaigner unjustly detained by the Indian state. Thousands of such people are languishing in the jails of the North-Eastern states, Jharkhand, West Bengal, Orissa, Chhatisgarh, Andhra Pradesh and elsewhere. One of the most remarkable cases is that of Irom Sharmila, a woman from Manipur who has been on a hunger strike since November 2, 2000 demanding the complete repeal of the AFSPA. She was arrested for attempted suicide that year, and has since been force-fed by the authorities to keep her alive.

In the name of fighting terrorism and extremism, the Indian state has gone to absurd and barbaric lengths to maintain its hegemony in a time of growing illegitimacy. If this is what the emerging shape of “the world's largest, fastest-growing democracy” is what would a totalitarian legal system look like?

India 's appalling human rights record in recent years has led the internationally renowned Human Rights Watch to conclude in their report last year:

“Despite an overarching commitment to respecting citizens' freedom to express their views, peacefully protest, and form their own organizations, the Indian government lacks the will and capacity to implement many laws and policies designed to ensure the protection of rights. There is a pattern of denial of justice and impunity, whether it is in cases of human rights violations by security forces, or the failure to protect women, children, and marginalized groups such Dalits, tribal groups, and religious minorities. The failure to properly investigate and prosecute those responsible leads to continuing abuses.”

Are we just going to sit and watch?

A universe of human struggle for dignity stands between rule by men and the rule of law. Some of the more glorious chapters in the history of the world since the American and the French revolutions occupy this universe.

Today in India we live – de facto – under the rule of men, rather than under the rule of law. As the moral decline of the Indian justice system keeps pace with the decay of the polity (there are over 25 million pending cases in our courts), are we going to keep sipping beer and munching chips while watching the IPL on Television every night? How long before the government admits that – election or no election – it can never assure the security of sportsmen and women again, the state Pakistan has already reached?

22 Nobel Laureates – including 9 in medicine, 9 in Chemistry, 2 in Physics and 2 in Economics – signed a petition a year ago asking for the unconditional release of Binayak Sen. They expressed “grave concern” that Dr. Sen has been held in prison for the peaceful exercise of fundamental human rights. They point out that this is in contravention of Articles 19 (freedom of opinion and expression) and 22 (freedom of association) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to which India is a signatory. They also point out that Dr.Sen is charged under two internal security laws that do not conform to international human rights standards.

There was not a single Indian name in that list . Does that say something about us?

Thankfully, less than a month ago, before the G-20 meeting in London, a group 141 UK-based academics, mostly Indians wrote a letter to The Guardian newspaper urging the G-20 to “consider human rights as well as the credit crunch” adding that “the needs of the world's underprivileged must be at the forefront of the G-20's discussions. The Government of India must act immediately to withdraw the charges against one of the strongest champions of social justice. We urge that Dr Sen be released, and be treated in the spirit of India 's own Constitution. At a time when the global economic situation has made the poor even more vulnerable, governments must support and work with, not incarcerate and abuse, those like Dr Sen and other human rights activists who work for positive change.”

But none of this is enough. Our outrage at the perpetrators of injustice needs to be louder and more relentless. We need to subject state functionaries to the same standards that they reserve for us citizens. Our judgment of truth and falsehood, right and wrong have suffered enormous reverses since the days of globalization and 24/7 entertainment began. If you think I am exaggerating consider taking a little quiz.

What is common to the following group of people? Socrates, Nelson Mandela, Kenneth Kaunda, Kwame Nkrumah, Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru, Jayaprakash Narayan, Faiz Ahmad Faiz, Binayak Sen

Irom Sharmila, Martin Luther King Jr., Henry Thoreau, Bertrand Russell, Rosa Luxemburg, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Andrei Sakharov, Leon Trotsky, Fyodor Dostoevsky, Alexander Pushkin.

Write your answer down.

Now consider a second group of people and try to see what they have in common: Mullah Omar, Osama Bin Laden, Jagdish Tytler, Sajjan Kumar

H.K.L Bhagat, Narendra Modi, Jyoti Basu, Buddhadeb Bhattacharjea, Bal Thackeray, George Bush, Tony Blair, Donald Rumsfeld, Dick Cheney, John Howard, Adolf Hitler, Josef Stalin, Ferdinand Marcos

Idi Amin, Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi.

Write your answer.

Now you can compare your answers with the right one. The first group of people all belong to a set who went to prison for speaking up against the injustices of their respective governments. The second group of people are mass-murderers who have been so fortunate as to never have to stand trial for their crimes. It is time to find our moral balance.

None of our famed newspaper columnists and TV anchormen and women – who should make it their foremost duty to help the governments we elect tell a terrorist from an untiring doctor and a vigilante force from a “peace movement” (what the Chhatisgarh CM described Salwa Judum on the last Republic Day) – have anything to say about the Binayak Sen case. Their dreams are made of power, not of justice. And so long as that remains true, the most powerful among our educated elites are going to continue to contribute to the rapid erosion of values and the very ethos of our culture and civilisation. The moral fabric which has held 3500 communities in relatively peaceful coexistence over dozens of centuries is today getting rapidly worn out under the impact of humanity's most powerful civilization in a state of decadent intoxication. The destructive gluttony for power is, above all, what is rapidly sealing the fate of nations and peoples in this age of so-called “globalization”.

This piece began with a story from America . It is perhaps fitting to end with a similar, even more illuminating and optimistic, story from our own shores. Many years ago, a dissident in Orissa, Damodar Rath protested the foolish injustices of the state government by going on a fast outside the prison where many similar people were incarcerated. His one and only demand was to be locked up inside with his friends. He sat there for ten days before the warden finally asked him why he wanted to suffer so foolishly. Rath's riposte was that there were better people inside than outside the jail.

The prisoners were released immediately!

Aseem Shrivastava is an independent writer. He can be reached at aseem62@yahoo.com
<http://countercurrents.org/shrivastava270409.htm/>

Why Is Binayek Sen In Prison?

By Arundhati Roy

08 April, 2009

Countercurrents.org

Press Statement by Arundhati Roy , Issued at the Raipur Satyagraha for the Release of Dr Binayak Sen April 6, 2009 / Raipur, Chattisgarh

Dr Binayak Sen has been in prison for 22 months, arrested under one of India's most draconian laws, the Chattisgarh Special Public Security Act. This Act has such a vague, diffused definition of 'Unlawful Activity' that it renders every person guilty unless he or she can prove their innocence. Dr Sen's bail application was dismissed twice, both times at the very outset, by the High Court of Chattisgarh and by the Supreme Court of India. On neither occasion was there a discussion on the merits of the case. On the 2nd of December 2008 the High Court of Chattisgarh once again turned down his bail application, without a discussion on the merits of the case, saying that there had been no change in circumstances.

But there has been a change in circumstances. To begin with, the charge-sheet has been filed. 64 witnesses have been examined by the prosecution. Not one of them has provided legally admissible evidence to support the accusations in the charge-sheet. Even the jail officials, the Superintendent and the Jailer, who were called as witnesses by the Prosecution, have ruled out the possibility of Dr Sen being a carrier of letters given to him by Narayan Sanyal (said to be a senior Maoist leader) who is a high security prisoner in Raipur Jail. (It should be mentioned here that Narayan Sanyal has a medical condition which requires surgical intervention from time to time, which is why the jail authorities permitted Dr Sen to visit him regularly.)

That Dr Sen should continue to be in prison when the case against him has almost completely fallen through says a great deal about the very grave situation in Chattisgarh today. There is a civil war in this state. Hundreds are being killed and imprisoned. Hundreds of thousands of the poorest of the poor are hiding in the forests, fearing for their lives. They have no access to food, to markets, to schools or healthcare. The thousands who have been moved into the camps of the government-backed peoples' militia, the Salwa Judum, are also trapped in sordid encampments, which have to be guarded by armed police. Hatred, violence and brutality is being cynically spread, pitting the poor against the poorest.

There is very little doubt that Dr Sen is in prison because he spoke out against this policy of the State Government, because he opposed the formation of the Salwa Judum. His incarceration is meant to silence dissent, and criminalize democratic space. It is meant to create a wall of silence around the civil war in Chattisgarh. It is meant to absorb all our attention so that the stories of the hundreds of other nameless, faceless people - those without lawyers, without the attention of journalists - who are starving and dying in the forests, go unnoticed and unrecorded.

Tomorrow is World Health Day. Dr Binayak Sen spent the best part of his life working among the poorest people in India, who live far away from the government's attentions, with no access to clinics, hospitals, doctors or medicines. He has saved thousands from certain death from malaria, diarrhea, and other easily treatable illnesses. And yet, he is the one in jail, while those who boast openly about mass murder are free to go about their business, and even stand for elections.

What does this say about us? About who we are and where we're going?

<http://www.countercurrents.org/roy080409.htm>

Towards The Second Year Of Mockery

By Jhuma Sen

05 April, 2009

Countercurrents.org

A month to go and India will again show that the cost of dissent a peaceful man pays in this country is a detention for two years on fictitious grounds. Almost a year ago, twenty two Nobel winners had come forward demanding Binayak Sen's release so that he could go and receive the 2008 Jonathan Mann Award for Health and Human Rights in Washington. Sen is the first Indian, nay the first South Asian to be selected for the award. Hundreds of people around the globe staged demonstrations, held vigils and organized public meetings demanding his immediate release on May 14, 2008, first anniversary of Sen's arrest. Another year has passed since and this time almost a hundred and fifty UK academics came forward appealing for his release. Does it penetrate the State's long ears, which usually has no difficulty in hearing inaudible whispers of 'Terror' everywhere, especially in areas called human rights and activism.

So it is terror everywhere. A public health professional who has tirelessly worked for issues of health services, social justice and basic livelihood suddenly finds himself as the object of the State's terrified fascination. Of course, in an era when rising GDP (never mind recession) is pinned against sliding basic necessities, the odds like Sen who still do not forget to care for human causes are indeed fascinating objects for the State. Sen's detention is and has been putting a series of question marks beside our Constitution's Preamble. Is this then, the quality of democracy we serve ourselves? Nearing the second year of the mockery of democracy, the questions will only get bolder and stronger.

In Binayak's determination to stand up against State atrocities on tribals, in his courage to establish sustainable health care services when none existed, in his dogged resolve to inject idealism at the grassroots and create a practical grassroots language of struggle and collective sharing, that he was made the perfect catch, almost flawless. The dubious case framed against Sen is nothing short of hilarious, and it doesn't take a genius to figure out the true reason of his arrest. The Chhattisgarh State Public Security Act is not something which corroborates with international human rights standards and charges framed against Sen have no basis or evidence. The other purpose served by Sen's arrest is that it validates BJP's consistent effort at deleting the line between Maoists and activists, the latter believing that legal process should always be followed even when dealing with violators of law. Binayak, a strong critic of the notorious Salva Judum, the inhuman anti Maoist policy of the state had to be silenced so that the systematic process of eliminating voices of dissent could continue.

Strangely those who belong to the rarified brand of Sen have found a louder and stronger voice this time to the utter dismay of our democracy. This dismay ought to be converted to horror to force the State to release Sen from languishing in the jail. While with the second year of his imprisonment now coming to a close, the UK academics group has urged-- that Dr Sen be released, and be treated in the spirit of India's own constitution. At a time when the global economic situation has made the poor even more vulnerable, governments must support and work with, not incarcerate and abuse, those like Dr Sen and other human rights activists who work for positive change, a number of organizations from different parts of India, including the PUCL, have launched the Raipur Satyagraha to step up the campaign for his release.

The Satyagraha - echoing Mahatma Gandhi's belief in nonviolent resistance - is going to be a sustained movement, where human rights activists, civil society organizations, lawyers, women's groups and other supporters will walk every Monday to the Raipur Central jail, where Sen is being held, and court arrest. On 30th March, the third batch of 90 protestors courted arrest, including spirited individuals from APDR, Bandi Mukti Committee, Sanjukta Paribahan Shramik Union, Shilpi Sena and others to name a few.

The Raipur Satyagraha has an enormous potential to achieve greater heights. It is time that the movement should spread from Raipur to other parts of this country. It is our collective responsibility to ensure that the institution called Binayak Sen doesn't fail, for our good and for the greater good of our Democracy.

Jhuma Sen is a lawyer currently working as a Research and Advocacy Officer at Lawyers Collective (WRI), having worked with Amnesty International India before.

<http://www.countercurrents.org/sen050409.htm>

A right to a fair trial, a right to life

The Lancet, Volume 373, Issue 9670, Page 1146, 4 April 2009

Editorial

Since May 15, 2007, Binayak Sen, a distinguished Indian paediatrician and a tireless human rights activist has been imprisoned in a Raipur jail in the state of Chhattisgarh, India. He has been convicted of no crime but is being held under draconian state laws for his alleged association with the Naxalites—an outlawed Indian communist movement, deemed to be a threat to national security. To date, there is no proof of his involvement in extremist activities but he remains incarcerated for supplementary charges indefinitely.

Sen and his wife, Ilina, have devoted their entire working lives to improve the health and welfare of the Adivasis, a marginalised and poverty-stricken tribal population. Violent conflict has prevailed in the region and Sen's relentless exposure of the state's human rights violations of this community are widely believed to be the real reason for his imprisonment: to set an example to others who would dare to expose state brutality and defend civil liberties. A troubling fallout of his incarceration is that much of his good work is slowly being eroded. His clinic, which provided essential health services, is on the verge of collapse, and many patients with both acute and chronic illnesses have gone untreated. The worldwide condemnation of his arrest and calls for his release continue to fall on deaf ears.

Of grave concern now are reports that Sen's health is deteriorating and that access to necessary medical care is being delayed. The right to life is a basic human right under the constitution of India. Every state functionary is obliged to protect the life of a detainee in custody and ensure proper medical treatment for him or her as and when required.

It is outrageous that Sen has now been in prison for almost 2 years in a prolonged trial that keeps shifting charges which are unclear and possibly politically motivated. Faith in the Indian justice system needs to be restored. The Indian Government must intervene and make sure justice is done, so that Sen and his family can return to a normal life and resume serving the poorest communities in the state.

[The Lancet is arguably the most prestigious and best known of the medical journals of the world. It is being published since Oct 5, 1823.]

http://www.thelancet.com/journals/lancet/article/PIIS0140-6736\(09\)60663-2/fulltext/60663-2/fulltext/)

<http://www.binayaksen.net/wp-content/uploads/2009/04/a-right-to-a-fair-trial.pdf/>

Here are some background links to learn more about Dr. Binayak Sen and this issue:

* Resources on Dr. Sen, ongoing campaign and the status of the trial:
<http://www.binayaksen.net/>

<http://www.freebinayaksen.org/>
<http://www.savebinayak.ukaid.org.uk/index.html/>

- * A petition to free Dr. Sen: <http://www.petitiononline.com/Binayak/petition.html/>
- * Statement of solidarity with Dr. Sen from internationally renowned intellectuals: <http://monthlyreview.org/0607sen.htm/>
- * Announcement of the Jonathan Mann Award for Dr. Sen: <http://www.globalhealth.org/news/article/9833/>
- * Medico Friend Circle Brochure on Dr. Binayak Sen: <http://www.mail-archive.com/greenyouth@googlegroups.com/msg03256.html/>
- * An analysis of Dr. Sen's case from the PUCL website: <http://www.pucl.org/Topics/Human-rights/2007/sen-case-analysis.html/>
- * Binayak Sen in Wiki: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Binayak_Sen/
- * Background information on the Chhattisgarh Special Public Security Act, 2006 <http://oldcontent.newswatch.in/news-analyses/attacks-on-scribes/3893.html/>
- * Background information on the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 2004 from Human Rights Features: <http://www.hrdc.net/sahrdc/hrfeatures/HRF106.htm/>
- * Information on other activists under the UAPA, 2004: Amnesty International on journalists Prashant Rahi, Govindan Kutty and Praful Jha: <http://www.amnestyusa.org/document.php?lang=e&id=ENGASA200032008/>
- * Frontline Defenders on Lachit Bordoloi of MASS: <http://www.frontlinedefenders.org/node/1360/>
- * Background on the arrest of Vernon Gonsalves, Shridhar Shrinivasan and Adv KD Rao: <http://www.lawyerscollective.org/content/letters-0/>
- * Background on Arun Ferreira http://in.news.yahoo.com/hindustantimes/20080411/r_t_ht_nl_general/tnl-naxal-prisoners-protest-torture-in-n-7244580.html/
- * Information about Salwa Judum: When the State Makes War on its Own People—A report from human rights organizations in India, 2006 <http://www.pucl.org/Topics/Human-rights/2006/slawajudum.htm/>