

Invitational Membership

Here are the steps:

1. Ask a faculty members to nominate 5 students that they feel would benefit by being a member of a club dedicated to community service and leadership development. If your school is very large or if you have a freshman seminar or class, you may want to target those professors.
2. From the students nominated, send letters to the students informing them of their nomination including the name of the faculty member who nominated them inviting them to join Circle K. This is very important as the faculty member is in their “sphere of influence” and your invitation to them to join Circle K will be more meaningful.
3. Arrange a special meeting for all of the nominees to learn more about Circle K so that they can become members. You should mention this meeting in the invitation discussed in point #2 above. Discuss your club projects, membership requirements, and club structure. Try to have an interclub from the sponsoring Kiwanis club to show support for the club.
4. Ask the nominees to become members.
5. Schedule an induction ceremony and present each of the new members with a pin and membership card. Get them involved in the club through service projects and district events. Make sure that the new members know that you are glad they are in Circle K.
6. Make sure that thank you notes are sent to the faculty members who give you nominations so they will be willing to help when you ask again in the future. You may even want to invite them to the induction ceremony.

The following letters are examples that can be reproduced to fit your school. They are in order to which they should be sent out.
