

~If I Were You and You Were Me~

"A pair made one? Yes!" Says Bill.

If you were me and I was you, what would you say and what would I do? I know that I would love you and you would love me! If that were not true, I would have told you.

These thoughts have crossed my mind many, many times. To confess such a thing I'll go ahead and say, people will think I had a fall from a very tall tree. And if that were not true, I would have told you.

Could it be said that we were touched in heart from a fall when I fell in love with you, and you fell in love with me? A fall more delightful than falling from a very tall tree! If that were not true, I would have told you!

If there is something wrong in my thinking this way, pray tell me what to do and say. If all that I've said is true—then what is true is true. If that were not true I would have told you.

I've thought about what I have said thus far, but there is more that I want to say. Remember when we said "I-do"? The binding of our "I-do" can not, it must not, be undone. It is then we became, under God, ONE! So, I be you and you be me? If that were not true, I would have told you!

So the final say I say to you, "Roses are red my love, violets are blue—OUOUOooo", and the God of Heaven knows I love you. However, with that said, it's not anything new. I've said that little ditty to you time and time again, as our time together now passed three score less half of ten.

Six words say I that say so well, and sound so right to me—"I love you—you love me", and that sounds good in two-part harm-o-'ne. "It has been a wonderful life with us holding hearts and hands together." If that were not true I would have told you so!

May our love last forever, and that equates to eternity, which equals forever (~). "Bobbie Ruth" you're my wife and I am your "Husband"—we are One! So, you are you, and I am me, but our life was blessed by God as one, and that does not equal three! I-you, you-me, we one, plus God equal two! That good math, not good English—if that were not true I would have told you so!

OUR LOVE Together ~ALWAYS
