

Scripps Howard News Service
November 12, 2002

- ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. - David Siebers, a recently freed, registered sex offender, is trying to get on with life in his new city.

But after Siebers, 46, recently visited a public library, Mayor Martin Chavez announced that he's going to purchase a one-way bus ticket for Siebers to get out of town.

Siebers didn't want to comment on the mayor's bus ticket offer Sunday during a brief interview through a crack in his trailer door.

Police are watching his every move. Officers and the mayor say they are almost certain Siebers will offend again.

Siebers served about 19 years in prison for numerous rapes and other related offenses, and was recently released.

Siebers has done his time, but now it seems he's still a prisoner.

The message is clear: Police and the mayor want Siebers out.

Law-enforcement officials in the last city Siebers lived in, Toledo, Ohio, went about the situation the same way - pressuring and then paying him to move on.

- Albuquerque Tribune