" When I tried to draw General Castelnau into this dangerous question by suggesting that we might borrow a French general or so, he would say only, "There is only one way to learn war, and that is to make war. Cope's views may be gathered from his "Origin of the Fittest" 1887; in this book page 41 is reprinted his "Origin of Genera" from the "Proc. Berenice reflected that if she were dealing with such a man he should never know her trulyhe should be made to wonder and to doubt. Wouldst thou not spit at me and spurn at me, And hurl the name of husband in my face, And tear the stain'd skin off my harlotbrow, And from my false hand cut the weddingring, And break it with a deepdivorcing vow? Three children were approaching; one of them, a little girl, about eight years old, was running; when pretty close to us she stumbled and fell, and her feet shot under the rail of the fence and for a moment projected over the stream. I can't be merry so near any splenetic talk; so I made that long line, and now all's well again. When it was not, we stepped very lively indeed. His only fear would be that you might want to take her away before he had written a paper about her. It was all there, all set forth minutely. The fogwhistle, smothered among a million of trifling sounds, is not noticed a block away, in the city, but the sailor hears it far at sea, whither none of those thousands of trifling sounds can reach. Alongside the first house, on the gray earth sat a gray man, practically naked. It twined its way down the fence like a snake from the leper's grinning mouth. That was allnot a wasted word, no further explanation. But if you do, sir, am for you. We have, however, at last a clear account by a wellknown observer, the Rev.
