

Career Analysis Of EVAN CORBETT

CAREER

Career goals describe the skills you use to subordinate yourself to larger public goals, responsibilities, or demands. These goals also can describe your duties, field of work, and your employer.

ANALYSIS OF CAREER

Your career tends to require you to promote, advertise, and publicize. Your responsibilities may call upon you to understand people's beliefs and values in a variety of different situations. You may need to introduce new concepts to broaden the realm of knowledge.

At work, avoid jobs where you have to deal with too many minor points. You can think easily in broad abstractions, but find it hard to focus on details that do not easily conform to established precedents that you are familiar with.

Your career reward is to assume the role of authority, speaking with knowledge and influence. Guard against vocational "role playing," or aspiration to some ideal role, as an attempt to gain freedom from authority. Your career may require years of preparation and stiff competition, and need a high commitment.

Educator, lecturer, lawyer, priest, missionary, philosopher, publisher, anthropologist, ethnicist, translator, advertising agent, publicist, public relations officer, importer, pilot, travel agent, tour guide, sports person.