

Extracted from
“The New Zealander Auckland,”

Wednesday, August 7, 1850.

The Emma from Sydney arrived in our port yesterday, after a tedious passage in consequence of the continued prevalence of unfavourable winds. She sailed on the 17th ult., three days after H.M.S. Havannah, so that we could not look for much news by her, and, at all events, the journals of that interval have not been forwarded to us. We have however, by the courtesy of Mr Henderson, seen the Herald of the 15th ult., but it contains nothing worth extracting – except perhaps a paragraph or two of shipping news, which we insert in their proper column.

The Emma has experienced a long continuance of contrary winds, and very rough weather. For the first thirteen days of her passage the wind was always from the east; and from the 26th to 30th ult., inclusive, it blew a hard gale between east and E.N.E, during which time she could never carry more than close reefed top-sails, and frequently only the main-sail. She sighted a barque on the 22nd ultimo off Howe’s Island, supposed to be the Nautilus, of Launceaton, from Hokianga.

Passenger List for the vessel: “Emma”

Rev. C. J. Abraham (Vice principal of St. John’s College, Bishops Auckland), Mrs Abraham and servant; Mr and Mrs Pace, and four children; Mesers, Johnson, Kingston, Pedler, and Mallett.

The End.