

Amrod

Amrod is the twin of Amras youngest sons of Fëanor. From their mother's kin they inherited red hair, instead of Fëanor's black.

Amrod became a hunter, who held the southern lands of the March of Maedhros. Amrod survived most of the War of the Jewels, but eventually fell in the Kinslaying of Siron.

In the published Silmarillion Amrod only appears together with his twin brother

Amras, but in late writings which were left out of the edited Silmarillion by Christopher Tolkien the story of Amras' death at Losgar appeared. For this reason wherever both Amrod and Amras appear in the published material it could be read as Amrod alone.

