

D 4 Use

At Threshold Level, learners should be able to understand and produce simple sentences within the limits of the Threshold Level specification, given that noun and verb phrases are not overloaded (cf. D 1.3 and B 4.6 above). Within the same limits they should be able to understand and produce compound sentences. They can be expected to produce complex sentences which are straightforward in character, e.g. limited to one subordinate clause of fairly simple structure with a main clause frame of a basic character, as for instance in the examples in this summary. Learners should be able to understand complex sentences containing more than one embedded clause, given that the internal structure of clauses and the relations between them are uncomplicated. It is difficult to define exact limits. Any learner who has attained Threshold Level competence should have little difficulty with such sentences as

He -said he 'wanted to ,leave.
'When I ,left, | I 'saw that it was ,raining.

or even:

We 'thought you were ,ill | be -cause you -said you had a ,headache.

An experienced and literate reader will perhaps be able to handle textual material of greater complexity and most learners will be able to achieve gist and single point comprehension in dealing with such texts. Listening comprehension is more demanding and the chain of understanding may be broken if the speech presented under conditions where repair strategies cannot be used is too complicated or too dense. In writing, simplicity is generally a virtue. In conversation, learners should be able to understand the interlocutor's contributions where they are short and within the limits of this specification. Where that is not the case, they should be able to operate repair strategies, using the expressions given in 5.6 (see also Chapter 12). Their own contributions may be expected to be relatively short, with short answers consisting of single phrases and clauses, simple sentences or the simplest of complex sentences. These simple means should, however, be sufficient to ensure communication at a basic level.

Open lists

N.B. These categories are 'open' in the sense that we do not try to define a vocabulary for all learners in the areas given. The words a learner needs will depend on circumstances, experience and interests. The examples given in the main text are such as to be likely to be of general use, but learners will need to be able to tell others their own nationality, occupation, etc. even if they are not in the list of examples.
