

Is a Preborn Baby a Part of His Mother's Body?

The answer is NO!

Why this question is important:

If he's part of the mother's body, it's morally okay to kill him. If he's not a part of her body, it's immoral (no matter that it's legal).

How this question came to be important:

Incredibly, because in 1973 the US Supreme Court ruled that an preborn baby isn't a person. Abortionists' reasoning therefore became, "If it's not a person, when a mother aborts, she's not killing anyone. She would be just removing a part of her own body."

This is a key to the abortion controversy.

But the abortionists are wrong, and here are twelve reasons why. Here are twelve reasons that THE PREBORN BABY IS A SEPARATE LIFE

Reason #1: The vast majority of the world's doctors say it is separate.

Reason #2: The chief geneticist of the Mayo Clinic, perhaps the most prestigious medical clinic in the world, says it is separate.

Reason #3: Fertilization occurs when sperm unites with egg. Then implantation on the uterus occurs. Clearly, life begins at fertilization. If this wasn't so, then birds could not be born--birds' eggs don't implant. Implantation isn't necessary for life.

Reason #4: If a live, human fertilized egg is to become a part of the mother's body, then his own life would cease as he became a part of her's. We know that this doesn't happen, because nine months later, he is born alive. Therefore, he didn't become a part of his mother's body. His life was separate all the time.

Reason #5: The preborn baby has it's own brain.

Reason #6: The preborn baby has his own heart.

Reason #7: The preborn baby has his separate blood supply. This can even be of a different blood type, one incompatible with his mother's blood.

Reason #8: The preborn baby always has his father's chromosomes.

Reason #9: Suppose we have a test tube, and in the test tube we fertilize an egg and the egg implants on the test tube wall. Is the fetus a part of the test tube's body? Of course not. Since the same thing happens inside a woman, then how could the fetus be a part of the woman's body?

Reason #10: Suppose we have a white woman who is impregnated by artificial insemination with an egg from a black woman, with such egg fertilized by an Oriental man. Also suppose the baby is a boy. Does the white woman now have three races, white, black, and Oriental? Does she now have two sexes? Does she suddenly have twenty fingers, twenty toes, two brains, and two hearts?

When the baby is born, does the white woman revert back to having one race and to being only woman? Does the baby change from having three races to having two and from being girl and boy to being only boy? Do he and his mother each lose ten fingers, ten toes, one brain, and one heart?

This would have to happen if the baby was a part of his mother.

Reason #11: Medical science has proven absolutely that an preborn baby undergoes excruciating pain during his abortion. This can be seen with a sonogram. A sonogram is like an X-ray in that it can see inside a person. In addition, a sonogram permits motion pictures to be made, not just still pictures. Two movies, "The Silent Scream" and "Eclipse of Reason" were made of an actual abortion. What was recorded on tape was motion pictures of what the baby was going through in the uterus. It is horrible.

Two ways babies are aborted are to chemically burn them to death inside and outside of their bodies, and to crush their skulls and tear off their arms and legs.

A question for you: Do women scream when they're having an abortion?

Conclusion: The preborn baby is a separate life!

Reason #12: You know in your heart that it's a separate life. For years, perhaps, you've pushed that feeling down, but you've known. You've taken in the pro-abortion slogans and accepted them intellectually, but still, you've known.

There could be several reasons why you suppressed the truth within yourself. Perhaps to justify your own past abortion or pending abortion. Or perhaps to justify demanding that your girlfriend or wife have one. Still, you've known.

How do we know this? Former owner of a chain of abortion clinics, Carol Everett, says that the women about to undergo abortions have to be kept calm and separated from each other. Why? Because, in spite of the pro-abortion slogans, they know what they're doing, and once in a while one of them loses control and starts screaming with grief and other emotional pain. The other women, also knowing in their hearts what they are doing, hear this and then also loose control. Soon, the whole building full of women victims who are screaming out what choice really means--death.

They knew it in their hearts all along, and so do you.

CONCLUSION: THE PREBORN BABY IS A SEPARATE LIFE!

If you have had an abortion, suggested that someone else have one, or are pro-choice, God will forgive you. But He will only forgive you if you turn away from this horrible sin. This is a must. You must even turn away from being pro-choice. He knows your thoughts.

You may also want to join a pro-life organization. About one-third of pro-life activist women have had abortions.
