

Hey mzungu – how are you?

These kids were so excited to get their picture taken!! Kids always call out, “Hey mzungu, how are you?” (mzungu = white person)

These kids live down the street from us. Erica took their picture (top) and then showed them their picture on the screen of her digital camera. They loved it! 😊 They screamed and laughed and suddenly more kids appeared and she took more pictures and showed them. It was so fun!! (notice the many varied expressions in the picture to the right)

Sunrise over Lake Victoria!
(view every morning from our balcony)

Erica and I outside the Engineering Ministries office.

Almost everyone who works here – lives here: three girls (incl. us), four guys, and a family of four who live on the first level. Erica and I live in the servants quarters behind the large house.

Our office is on the second level, and there is a balcony from which we can see as far as Lake Victoria!

This really is the world of 'haves' and 'have-nots'. Everywhere there are mansions built next to shacks, all sharing the same dirt road full of potholes. This area seems fairly quiet because it is 7km from downtown Kampala. Around a couple corners is a busy market. Across the street (bottom) are small shops selling drinks, eggs, flour, beans....

This is the street on which I live, Bukasa Rd. on the border between Muyenga and Namuwongo (two areas of Kampala).

A little tour around my neighbourhood....

We live very close to a rock quarry where people crush the rock by hand for a living.

That's Erica using the surveying equipment!

We went up to a site near the town of Luweera (bottom right), where my office has designed an administration building for New Hope. New Hope is an orphanage in the countryside that houses over 100 orphans. They also have a primary and secondary school building.

We were surveying the foundation to make sure the construction process was going smoothly!

Mweraba – good bye!
