Vigilance Patrols Chinatown

by Mark Mars

The masked man known as Vigilance was seen leaping from building top to building top in Chinatown last evening. Police officials at the Chinatown Police Station refused comment, but off the record several patrolmen were willing to say that they believed he was seeking information on the so-called Dread Dragons, members of a criminal organization that has recently been suspected of committing several crimes in the neighborhood.

Chess Machine to be Matched against World Master

by Chase Chesterton

Professor Malthus, world-famous expert in artificial thinking machines, has announced that his latest invention, the M-5 Computational Device, will be matched against the United States' greatest chess player, Grand Master Vladimir Victorov. A date has not yet been set, but Mr Victorov, a member of the Sunset City expatriate Russian community, is reportedly very eager to prove the superiority of the human mind against the power of the modern computing machine.

Russians found Unconscious in Sunset Park

by Mark Mars

Several Russian immigrants were discovered in the early hours of the morning in Sunset Park. Two of them were badly burned, the others all bore bruises and signs of fighting. It is believed that they were having a party celebrating their recent arrival in the United States, and after consuming too much vodka they fell to fighting among themselves. The more seriously wounded were escorted to the hospital, the others were given a stern lecture by the police and released.

Sunset City Ballet Unveils Modern Work

by Cat Cardigan

A new ballet called "The Happy Housewife" will be performed by the Sunset City Ballet Company. This work uses modern music and dance to illustrate the life of a girl as she grows from a carefree teeny-bopper to a responsible wife and mother. It will be danced as a double bill with the Ballet's current production of "Medea."
