

SUNSET CITY SENTINEL

WHERE IS VIGILANCE?

By Patricia Weathers

The recent crash of the Vigilancecopter on the slope of Devil's Mountain has led to widespread concern over the fate of Sunset City's premier defender. Sources within the Parks and Recreation Department report that shortly after the crash Sunset City's other heroes, including the mighty Direwolf and the stylish Dixie Hill, were combing the mountain searching for clues as to the missing hero's fate. As of yet there has been no official statement from any of these heroes, and the mayor's office refused to comment on reports that there is no answer to attempts to reach Vigilance via the Vigilancephone in City Hall. The city holds its breath as it wonders about the fate of its most beloved son, and wonders what dire consequences his disappearance might herald.

IRONCLAD SIGHTED

By Butler Wiseman

Police have received several reports in the recent past from concerned citizens regarding supposed sightings of the armored supervillain Ironclad. None of these reports have been collaborated, and police sources privately report some skepticism, saying that such sightings are almost certainly mistaken, and that Ironclad has most likely already left the area where he was once captured. Repeated requests for an official statement regarding the search for the escaped criminal, or information on how he regained his suit of advanced powered armor, which had supposedly been confiscated by the Army, have not been answered.

MISSING CHILD FOUND BY DIREWOLF

By Mark Mars

The superhero Direwolf, most commonly known for his fights against powerful enemies such as Ironclad and his inspirational effect on disadvantaged youth, took time out from his crimefighting efforts to locate a missing boy and return him to his family. Police had been called by the parents of the lost child, last seen feeding ducks in Sunset Park, but had been unable to locate him. The parents' fears were relieved when the hero arrived at their doorstep, the excited lad in tow.

SPECTER RETURNS FROM HOLLYWOOD CITY

By Cat Cardigan

World famous stage magician and patron of the arts Magnus Specter has returned to Sunset City after a visit to Megalithic Studios in Hollywood City. Hollywood rumors are buzzing regarding Specter's meeting with the head of the studio, and the possibility that there might be a major motion picture in the works featuring the magic of the Mysterious Specter. Such speculation has been fueled by Specter's recent branching out into a stage role in the Sunset Ballet's production of The Nutcracker.

ROCKET LAUNCH BACK ON TRACK

By Chase Chesterton

US Space Agency officials have announced that the Hermes 6 is back on schedule for a launch in the near future. Communications problems that became evident during the Hermes 5 mission have been resolved, and President Farfield's pro-science and pro-space policies have put a premium upon getting the stalled space program up and running again as quickly as possible. According to inside sources, additional monitoring equipment designed by Lexcorp Industries will be added to the space capsule, to ensure reliable communications and data flow during the mission.

PHILANTHROPIST REPORTED ILL

By Cat Cardigan

Sunset City businessman and philanthropist William Francis Drake is rumored to be suffering from the effects of a severe illness. Mr Drake has cancelled numerous engagements in the recent past, and has reportedly curtailed his commitments in the business and artistic community. Requests for information on Mr Drake's condition were not answered.
