

YouTube told to drop celeb sex video

SAO PAULO, Brazil (Reuters) – (Paragraph 1) A Brazilian court ordered the popular video sharing service YouTube, a unit of Internet search provider Google, to shut down until it removes a celebrity sex video from its site, a judicial clerk said Thursday.

(Paragraph 2) Daniela Cicarelli, a model and ex-wife of soccer great Ronaldo, sued YouTube (after a video of her apparently having sex in shallow water on a beach with her boyfriend was posted to the site).

(Paragraph 3) Cicarelli and boyfriend Tato Malzoni filed to force YouTube to take the video down and demanded $116,000 for each day the video remains up. Some copies of the video have been taken off the site but users have reposted it.

(Paragraph 4) The case dragged on for several months before they filed a third suit in December (requesting that YouTube be shut down as long as the video is available to users).

(Paragraph 5) The court honored that request Wednesday, but legal experts say the ruling (...) could be difficult to enforce in the United States (where YouTube is based).

(Paragraph 6) Last year, a Brazilian court demanded Google to disclose data on local users of its social networking site Orkut who had pages with content supporting racism or child pornography. Google took down some of those Orkut pages but has said that under U.S. law it could not reveal user data... .
