

This is not the biography of a person, but rather the biography of my mind.
[work-in-progress]

1982-1988 An interesting thing happened to my memory somewhere in this time frame- a sort of active, self-monitoring and context-integrating memory began to emerge. There were moments of contemplation of past events already stored, moments of questioning the persistence through time of this or that engram, constructive memories, alternating moments of passive and active memory imprinting. This is why most of my memories from this period on are second-order or higher-order memories. Entering them, one finds recursive constructions and, gradually, a fuzzy boundary towards déjà-vú -like structures is trespassed. All this is just an attempt to describe in a phenomenological manner the first move made by my memory when accessing this time frame as it is stored in it. The propensity towards creating higher-order memories is responsible for the process of gradual fuzzification of my memories from this period. It is not the fuzzification of the content of those memories that is the subject here, but rather the fuzzification of the original quale of the situation to be stored in memory.
