Premiering Winter 2008
At St. Paul Community Music School

Early Childhood Music
& Movement Classes
For families and children ages birth– five years.

Early exposure to music at a young age will help your child appreciate music, be able to respond appropriately to music, and will create a lifelong love of music. Musical development in the early childhood years also helps development in language, motor (fine and gross), social and higher level cognitive skills. Research on brain studies with children in their formative years have proven this time again in the area of music. This is why Music Town Kids was created.

Music Town Kids is an early childhood music and movement service for children and their families in the Cincinnati area. There are classes for individual children and their parents/guardians as well as family classes for everyone in your family. Parents/guardians are part of the music making process as their child's "first teacher." Activities in class include lots of singing (as the best teacher of music in early childhood), playing instruments, games, stories, listening to classical music, and lots of movement—both free and structured. Much more is involved in the classes besides singing. Parents can get information about the stages of development of their child, better understanding their child and helping them grow through music and movement. Plus the special bond that will grow between parent and child is life changing and priceless!

Music Town Kids is different than the early childhood music and movement classes offered in the Cincinnati area. The classes have adopted the philosophies of Carl Orff and Zoltan Kodaly, two leading music philosophies, specifically with early music development. Songs used in the classes are folk songs—the best types of songs for your child. There will not be songs that are newly composed and no piggyback songs to teach concepts. Instead the quality of music used will teach concepts through songs children should know to understand their world and culture. All songs and activities are age appropriate to meet your child's needs. The classes will seem more like play—this is the most appropriate way a child in their early years learns. Plus, classes are affordable for the hard working family—because all children should have music in their lives.
