

(Day, 2)

The Binondo Church is 420 years old. Which means it was built in 1598, around 30 years after Spain colonized the Philippines. I imagine that it was built by Filipinos being ordered by a Spanish friar. This church was built under Spanish influence and it is a wonder how it survived to this day.

(Wikipedia)

I noticed how similar the architecture is with the Manila Central Post Office and American government buildings. The design must be alike because of the U.S. bringing their form of government over and layouts of building over.

(MyCebu.ph)

The Yap-Sandiego house was the home of a Chinese businessman in the 1600s. The design is similar other houses in the 17th century Philippines, but has Chinese lanterns and an Eastern Asian plant outside.

(Nocum)

Intramuros is a walled city located in Manila and the oldest section in Manila. It is a walled city built by the Spanish used as the Capital for the Philippines and a trading post.