WELCOME TO SAMANA

The Samana Peninsula is located in the northeast end of the Dominican Republic, between the Samana Bay and the Scottish Bay. The peninsula has always attracted those from abroad. When Columbus arrived, the local natives greeted him with a rain of arrows. Part of the bay today is even known as the Gulf of Arrows (Golfo de las Flechas). The French and English were frequent visitors. Even America once offered to buy it for a million pesos. The Peninsula is one of the most aged regions of the island; it emerged from the bottom of the sea about 500 million years ago. Proof can be seen in the deposits of soft coal in Sanchez, and the Portoro vast marble reserve, the world wide exclusivity of which is held by Italy and the town of Samana.

A cultural oddity, Samana was founded by English speaking U.S. slaves in the 1820's, whose descendants, called Americanos, still survive today. However, much of the peninsula was destroyed by fire in 1946, and so there is little evidence of its past history.

Today, with its golden beaches, shaded by thousands of coconut palms (it has the greatest amount in the world of coconut trees per square meter), it has become an ideal destination for nature and adventure sport lovers. Its isolation from the rest of the Dominican, due to the mountain range that separates the peninsula from the rest of the country, has helped to keep its streams, forest, inlets and beaches, hidden, solitary and wild.
