

The Ark of Noah

Morris Bradley

In the past there have been many stories about Noah's Ark, how it was built, and where it voyaged during the Great Flood. It seems that everybody has a theory about this event, myth or legend, so we put a request out to our spirit guides and the following story is the information that was passed on to us. It seems a bit far out at times and conflicts a bit with the traditional tale. However, it could possibly have happened in this manner.

Noah was the progeny of Star people and Earth beings. At this point in time there was much fraternising with the "Sons of God", who came down to Earth and lived among Men. However, there were good guys and bad guys among these star people, but the ancestors of Noah were here to help the World, and because of their advanced knowledge, knew that our planet was due to suffer a polar flip which would alter land masses and destroy a lot of human and animal life. This all took place about 29,000 years ago, and Noah started to receive from "God" ,or per His agents, that a forthcoming calamity was soon to occur and that he could avoid this disaster and the "wrath of God" if he built a huge boat or Ark. Once aboard this with his loved ones and animals, they would be able to "ride out the storm.

According to our spirit mentors, there was not just one boat, but two, and the first one was about ninety feet long, thirty five feet wide, and about twenty eight feet high. This first boat would eventually carry six men, three women, two children and an "extra-terrestrial", plus some animals to be used for food supply. The second boat was linked strongly to the first but was a type of barge to be towed and this was about ninety feet long, forty five feet wide and twenty feet high. This punt-like construction carried two extra-terrestrials and all the animals that they wished to save from the disaster.

In those days the Mediterranean Sea was a large fertile valley with many different civilizations existing there. Contained within this valley or basin were lakes and rivers, towns and cities. Noah lived in an area near where Cyprus is today and it is in this place that he and his helpers constructed the great Arks under “heavenly guidance”. This project took many years but eventually the task was completed, the livestock and birds were collected, and all the food, etc., was stowed away, and then soon the weather began to change, there were storms, torrential downpours, earthquakes and lightning as the World rocked while “changing poles”. As this happened the Atlantic Ocean poured into the Mediterranean Valley, inundating everything and washing the two boats of Noah up into Greece, but, as the water slowly subsided, they drifted with the currents back down into Syria and finally settled in an area where today we have the City of H...., or Hamar.

In past times it seemed quite normal for “Earthlings” to be helped by extra—terrestrials, and, in most cases, these beings were called Angels or “messengers”. This was the case with Lot in Sodom and Gomorrah, who had “two heavenly visitors” to warn him of an approaching calamity. The same applies today for there are many reported incidents where “mysterious strangers” from some other dimension comes and warns those who will listen about the impending disasters that are possible in our time and yet the powers that be in every country ignore the whole thing and label the contactees as “loonies”.

The Bible report says that Noah took one pair of each of the species of nature, male and female, into the Ark with him, but this is really not so and exaggeration and an elaboration of a simple tale. The size of the craft alone would not permit such a horde of creatures owing to the lack of room. Then there would be a feeding problem. We know that the storm raged on for forty days and forty nights, but the Arks actually floated for just on one hundred and twenty days before they finally grounded, and it was not on Mount Ararat either, but some thousands of miles in the opposite direction. Just imagine the facilities you would need on a boat to store enough raw meat for lions and tigers with which to feed them for 120 days. Next there would have been all the problems with the droppings, as the gases rising from these would just about choked the people on board.

On the first boat Noah took sheep, goats, asses, fowls and some birds plus fodder for these animals. On the second boat they loaded up horses, dogs, camels, pigs and other animals which were, vital to their existence because Noah thought that it was a type of migration and that they would arrive in a new place and have the basic elements to start their life over again. One thing is for sure, they were not interested in wild animals. As we were told in earlier articles about the “Great Flood”, it did not go all over the Earth and destroy all life forms but it certainly changed the face of the globe and wiped out many civilizations with the possibility of the same thing happening again in the next fifty years. If an extensive underwater survey was conducted in the Mediterranean Basin, there would still be some remains of the old cities that would prove the one time existence of many great nations in these areas. Some believe that Atlantis was in this area as well, but the guides say NO emphatically to this claim.

In his books “Earth in Upheaval,” and “Worlds in Collision,” the famous Jewish author Velikovsky gives very pertinent details about The Flood, and in “Ages in Chaos,” shows that many dates recorded in the Bible are way off the mark. The writer in ancient times did the best they could in recording all the old stories that had been passed on from father to son for centuries, but they were not infallible and made many errors. This is why it is so handy to be able to get some help from the spirit guides who delve into the Akashic Records and bring forth a more correct version of what actually did happen in those olden times. Thanks to the immortality of Man’s Soul these things are possible. We get a classic example concerning the discovery of the City of Troy early in this century. The acknowledged experts on History placed ancient Troy in one area, but an ordinary simple man kept getting Visions that Troy was actually somewhere else miles end miles away. His theory was laughed at by all the moguls of Archaeology, so he raised the money and mounted a private expedition to dig for Troy and found it exactly in the spot that he had been directed to in his “visions”. This is just another example of the “powers up above” setting the records straight.
