

The Soul of Man

Morris Bradley

If mankind as a species evolved from the animal kingdom as the evolutionists teach, at what stage of this development was the soul added. As we know Man is an animal, a mammal and has many similarities to the great ape family, and many believe that humans are closely related to the Simians and just a few steps further up the evolutionary chain. According to our "guides" man has a Spirit, etheric body, and a physical body, and so do all the animals, however at some stage Man jumped up the scale and a soul, often termed "the essence of God" was added, and once this change took place Man was lifted above the animals and was capable of incarnations which was the next stage of progression on the evolutionary cycle, that moves ever onward and upwards, nothing is static, everything is changing, just as it was when in the "pea soup" of Creation, the first amino acids and sugars were formed that would eventually become the "spark of life."

Maybe primeval Man was in existence a million years in the initial animal state before the introduction of the soul to his being, but until the "essence of God" was added, Man was just another of the animal species of this World. The new structure of Man an was then composed of a Soul-Spirit unit, plus an etheric counterpart, and a physical body. When physical death takes place, the solid body perishes (returns to the dust of the Earth,) the etheric counterpart will eventually dissipate back into the ethers, the Spirit will remain as a replica of that which once existed and dwell within a special area in the Spirit realms, and the Soul which is a minute distillate of the "essence of God" will stay with God until its rebirth again into the physical realms for its next lessons and experiences. With each existence, the sum total of the experience is distilled and added to the essence of God until the "vial" is filled with the "precious liquid" (essence of God) and once this action is completed the soul is ready for the next stage of the evolutionary journey to a higher dimension of existence, and so it goes on to infinity.

In the work titled Kaitangaroa, Maori Guide, the author is told through clairvoyance, that the soul unit was only added to Man about 75,000 to 80,000 years ago. At this stage of Man's development there appeared to be four main species of humans in existence and there were the Negroid people of Africa, the Australian Aboriginals. the Melanesian and the Eire people of Guatemala and there was a period of about 5,000 when these people transited to become at last the "children of God," and then the spirit creations of God, which says, "male and female made in our own image and likeness, was able to enter as souls into the fleshly animal body of Man and endeavour to start to "tame the savage beast" through the love of God, and by this process be able to inwardly inspire and direct Mankind to evolve mentally, intellectually, and technologically, and become a “glorious example of God’s own Creation” - a long journey from out of the primitive depths of the swamps and jungles into a reasoning controlled intellectual being capable of conquering the vast depths of space and unlocking the secrets of the Universe and the very source of life.

For every life that Man has lived there is always a record of the existence left behind as a type of record, so that it is possible through clairvoyant vision to look back and see how many lives a person has experienced for each spirit of each incarnation has a total knowledge of all that occurred to them in each earthly visitation. On death, the Soul-Spirit unit splits up, and the spirit with all of each particular life’s actions and thoughts recorded remains as a memorial, while the soul with its distilled essence of each individual incarnation returns to the “fold of God” to await the next rebirth.

Perhaps there is something significant in the statement, which says that Man must be born again to enter “the kingdom of Heaven” the ultimate destination of Man, and it is only possible to reach this level by constant rebirth and fortifying the soul with the “distilled essence” of each incarnation. Using this system one could ultimately “sit at the right hand of God.”

It appears, according to the “guides” that the “dark skinned” races were the original inhabitants of our Earths plane and that most of the other races in existence today were introduced to this planet by “colonization” process, so were many of the animals, and some of the plant life, but this is covered more extensively in Kaitangaroa; Maori Spirit Guide. The “guides” have also indicated that the soul part of Man is rather unique to the planet Earth and though there are many other type of Humanoid people in other galaxies many of these races do not re—incarnate in their own spheres of existence, and many live for hundreds of years longer than Earth people but when they die, they cease to exist anywhere. This is another subject that will be discussed later.

In the Old Testament of the Holy Bible there is a passage that reads “the sons of God looked down upon the daughters of Man and found them comely, so they came down to Earth and bred with them, and the offspring of this union were Giants.” Did they mean physical giants or mental giants, or is this even true? Here we have a case where some type of “beings” obviously humanoid by nature, descended from “somewhere” and interbred with the Earth inhabitants and produced a new species, just like grafting a new branch on an old tree, or some form of cross-breeding to produce a different stock. If this did happen, how many occasions did it occur, and with whom, and when? If the Negro and the darker skinned people were the original progeny of this planet, where did all the other races come from, does this old historical story give some indication concerning the growth of new races? Our "guides" at times have mentioned that there are other people who visit our galaxy and interbreed with Earth beings so that they can inherit a soul, or at least, their children can, so if this is so, they must feel that our evolutionary spiral of progression is better than theirs, despite their own advanced technology that allows them to arrive here in the first place. History seems to indicate that all white people when first seen by the darker skinned people, thought that the "pale ones" were Gods, come down from the skies. Why? Another mystery often occurs and that is how it seems that some seemingly very primitive tribes suddenly become possessors of information that is way ahead of them, such as ways to make alloys out of different metals in the correct proportions and know things about the geographical situation of their own climes and the existence of other places, or the movement of the planets and the stars etc. Some forms of high technology suddenly appear among primitive tribesmen. We have much to learn regarding our origin and with some tolerance it is possible to comprehend the evolution theory and understand the spiritual definition as to when man became a living soul, and this was certainly not in the very primitive animal stages, but somewhere along the way when natural instincts could be re-placed or at least augmented by some form of logical reasoning powers combined with free-will and free-agency for Man to make the choice as to whom he should serve.
