

Dear Sir/Madame,

I'm writing to you on behalf of one Florian Pohl - a former teacher of mine. I first came to know him at Temple University where I received an A in his class; Intro to Western Religions. Upon enrollment in the class I was merely fulfilling a University requirement, but Florian's personal and engaging methods as an instructor inspired a continued interest in theology and I am currently one course shy of a degree in religions from Temple University.

Florian has cast himself in the mold of all great teachers. He is engaging, intelligent and most importantly quick on his toes. He displays a certain malleable quality necessary in a classroom to steer lessons and debate. He avoids stagnant lectures; instead Florian guides his students through discussion, letting them find the answers themselves. Florian, however, realizes that all answers must be questioned and he frequently assigns reading materials that challenge even our most basic assumptions.

Florian Pohl is an excellent teacher; I would strongly recommend him for any position he may be in consideration for.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'M. Zito', with a long horizontal flourish extending to the right.

Michael Zito