

OBITUARY.

MR. H. B. CROMWELL.

Our obituary column yesterday contained the announcement of the death of Mr. H. B. CROMWELL. Mr. CROMWELL was born April 29, 1828, in the City of New-York. In 1847, before he was twenty years of age, he became a member of the cloth-house of CROMWELL, HAIGHT & Co., of which his brother was senior partner. Soon afterward he was offered a partnership in a large commission house in Huddersfield, England, that of JOHN HAIGHT & Co. He accepted this offer, and remained in Huddersfield until 1853—three years—when he returned to this City, and in the early part of 1854, founded a propeller line in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. His business grew upon his hands until he had connections with nearly all the important domestic seacoast ports. When the war broke out, he sold nearly all his vessels to the Government, but immediately proceeded with the construction of two fine steamers—the George Washington and George Cromwell—which have for the last two years been plying between this port and New-Orleans.

Although but thirty-six years of age at the time of his death, Mr. CROMWELL had, by his marvelous business tact and energy, laid the foundations of an extensive business, from which he was reaping results that very few men would have attained at the end of a much longer lifetime. Notwithstanding Mr. CROMWELL's extensive business connections with the South, it is worthy of note that from the first he has been unswervingly loyal, giving the Government all the aid in his power to assist in suppressing the rebellion.

DR. J. HENRY DEVLIN.

This estimable and promising young man died at the residence of his father, in Hudson-street, on Monday evening, of disease contracted in the discharge of his duties as one of the resident physicians of Bellevue Hospital. He was ably attended, and all the skill and ingenuity of the profession was of no avail. He is the fifth or sixth physician attached to Bellevue Hospital that has fallen a victim to typhus fever within the last year. He was of a mild disposition, retiring and unassuming manners, and of great moral worth.

BOSTON, Tuesday, April 5.

Mr. SEWELL PHELPS, of the firm of PHELPS & DALTON, the well-known printers, died last night, at the advanced age of 66, of diphtheria.

The marine insurance offices of the city closed at noon to-day, to enable the officers and employes to attend the funeral of CALKB CURTIS, late President of the Neptune Insurance Company.
