

HYLIANS

The Hylians are, by a long shot, the most common race in all of Hyrule. They have spread to almost every inhabitable corner of the world, and are the most adaptable of the races. Though not as strong as the Gorons, or as nimble as the Kokiri, the Hylians have managed to carve out their own territory through willpower, flexibility, and tenacity, and they are now the major power in Hyrule.

Hylians cannot be grouped into any major personality group, as they are as varied as snowflakes, nor can they be described physically in just a few sentences, since they are all so unique.

The political structure of the Hylians is very different from the other races. While the other four races claim one central location as the birthplace of their species, the Hylians have no such luxury.

There are eight major kingdoms throughout the land, and a number of other, smaller nations scattered about between them. The most famous of the kingdoms is the Hyrule Monarchy. It is assumed by most that they are the original kingdom of the Hylians, and is, in essence, the closest thing they have to a true home. Many of the other kingdoms and nations dispute that fact, but it is without a doubt the strongest and largest of all the Hylian nations.

The Hylians, because of their flexibility, have no specific strengths or weaknesses as a race. When creating a Hylian character, add a +1 bonus to any two attributes, and a -1 from any one attribute. They get 3 extra skill points to spend as they wish during the Class stage of character creation, and one extra Special Ability of their choice, assuming they meet the prerequisites for it.

