

When Did You Become a Family?

When did you become a family?

Was it the day you met, by complete chance, not even knowing how significant you would be in each other's lives?

Or was it when you fell in love?

You may not have said it first, but you eventually said it back.

You remember how ecstatic he was the moment the words left you.

Did it occur the day of your first hard time together?

When his dad was in the hospital, and you stayed up all night talking to keep him calm?

Did it happen after your first fight, when you made up?

As angry as you were, you weren't leaving each other behind.

You put it behind yourselves, and the two of you were stronger for it.

Maybe it was when he proposed?

When he caught you completely off guard,

even getting a friend to film it for you.

It might have been the first time you thought of running away together.

You were joking at first, but it became an option.

Your brain said no, your heart said yes, that really could have been the moment.

But it couldn't have been after your wedding day.

Sure, you both teared up upon seeing each other in the church, but you were a family long before that.
